Now read the opening section of The Legend of Gelert (resource one.) I have also recorded me reading the text to you. Listen to the expression that I use – maybe you could film/record yourself reading with the same expression?

Are there any similarities yet to the legends you looked at yesterday? Write them in your remote learning book.

I would like you to read the text again, and think about the following..

What do we already know?

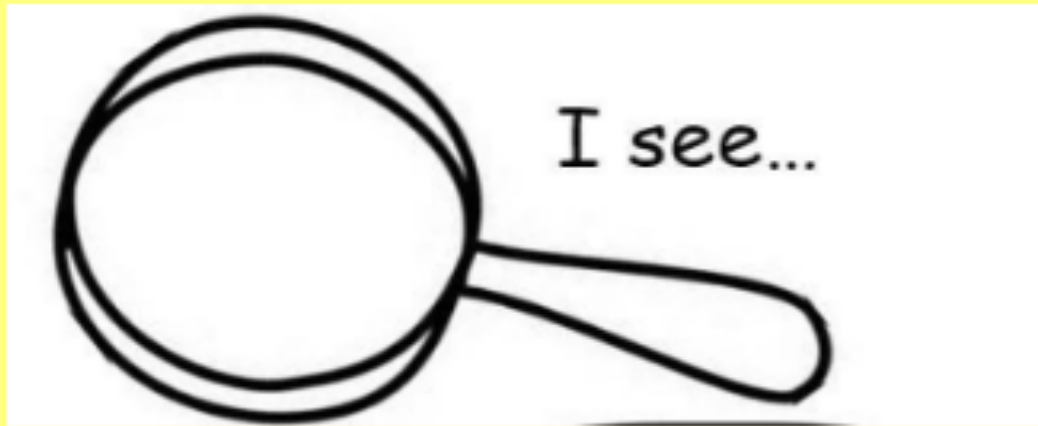

What assumptions can we make about the characters?

What do we predict could happen?

In your remote learning books, I would like you write down

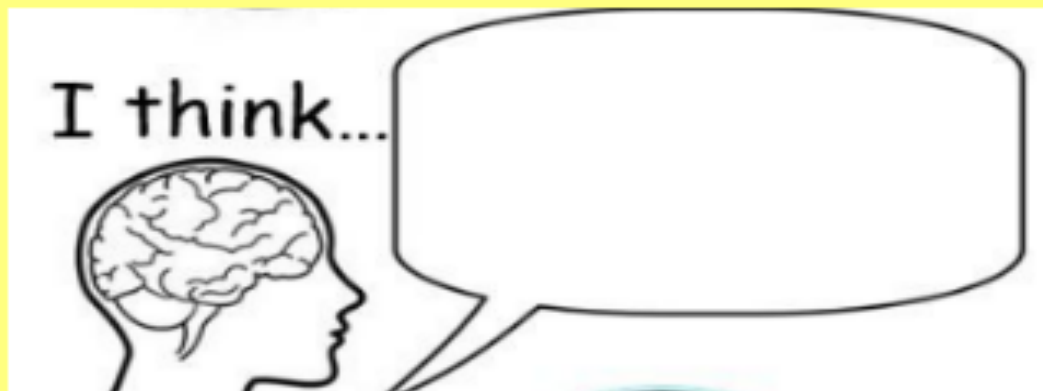

- What you already know
- What assumptions can you make about the characters?
- What do you predict could happen in the rest of the legend?

I have done an example for each on the next few pages.
Please lay your work out clearly, in a similar way to mine.

What do we already know?

I know that Prince Llewelyn lives in a castle with his son and dog, Gelert. I also know...

What assumptions can we make about the characters?

I assume that Llewelyn is a good character because he is a prince who protects his kingdom.
I think he is a good father because...

I assume that Gelert will protect the baby because...

What do we predict could happen?

I predict that Fleweyn will get injured on his hunt. I wonder if Geberk will come to his rescue..
